Traditionally, course development is a fiercely guarded territory where an academic works highly independently, developing expertise through education, scholarship, experience, peer feedback or by attending generic professional development workshops.

However, the territory is changing, influenced by globalisation and technology and a profile of appropriate expertises may be needed to maximise the impact of the online learning space...

Working with OED’s in a team enables an engaging learning space AND provides meaningful and relevant professional development for a sustainable approach.

We don’t know what we don’t know until an informed person makes a suggestion....
